Computer programmer David Jones makes £35,000 a year designing new computer games, yet he cannot find a bank prepared to let him have a cheque card. Instead, he has been told to wait another two years, until he is 18.

The 16-year-old works for a small firm in Liverpool, where the problem of most young people of his age is finding a job. David's firm releases two new games for the expanding home-computer market each month.

But David's biggest headache is what to do with his money. Despite his salary, earned by inventing new programmes, with bonus payments, he cannot drive a car or obtain credit cards.

He lives with his parents in their house in Liverpool, where his father is a bus driver. David's company has to pay £150 in taxi fares just because David cannot drive. David got his job four months ago, after working for a time in a computer shop. "I got the job because the people who run the firm knew I had already written some programmes", he said.

"I hope it will come to more than £35,000 this year. But most of my spare time is spent working. Unfortunately, computing was not part of our studies at school. But I had been studying it in books and magazines for four years in my free time. I knew what I wanted to do. I would like to earn a million."
